TUNNEL VENTILATION.

Description of the Great Railway Subway Under the River Mersey.

Amply Lighted and Ventilated by Monster Fans.

All the New Haven Railroad Directors Under Bonds to the Coroner.

That there is no adequate basis for the denia by the New York Central Railroad officials of the feasibility of lighting and ventuating the fourth Avenue Tunnel, has been demonstrate by the Evenine World in the publication and Eplanation of the manner in which these ob jects are accomplished in the rallway tunnel at

Further evidence that long tunnels can be ventilated and lighted effectively, when the authorities in charge desire to accomplish such ends, is found in the following description of the famous tunnel under the River Mersey, from Liverpool to Birkenhead, in England. before the Institution of Civil Engineers by Francis Cox, M. Inst. C. E., and printed in

Tais tunnel was built with the object of ef- Possibility of Eismarck Standing fo fecting railway communication between Liverool on the Lancashire and Birkenhead on the Cheshire shore of the River Mersey and the failway systems on each side of the river.

The authorized railways of the company esent a total length of 5% miles of double line on the standard gauge of 4 feet 6% inches. The railway was opened to public traffic Fets. 5. 1886, a little over six years from the starting of the orelim nary work.

When work on the tunnel was begun two shafts were sunk, one at Liverpool 15 feet in lameter and about 170 feet in depth, and one at Birkenhead, 17 feet 6 inches in diameter and walls on the two banks of the estuary of the liver Mersey, at the points between which the tunnel passed under, was 1,890 yards, the fance between the pumping shafts being 1. WO yards.

From each shaft a drainage heading was driven under the river towards the centre. The drainage arrangements resulted in the tunnel itself being remarkably dry. On the occasion of the opening the tunnel was lighted by gas, and thousands of visitors walked from end to end, without so much as seeing a drop of water, the only complaint being that it was slightly dusty.

The river tunnel is 26 feet in width, and, where in rock, is lined and inverted with prickwork in cement 2 f. et 8 inches in thickness. The minimum amount of cover between the extrados of the arch and the bed of the river is about 80 feet, and the depth of water bove at high tide is 100 feet.

The tunnel was carried out by means of a seading driven through at all speed, and numerous break-ups, so that at one time work was proceeding from twenty-four faces, the whole being well drained. Additional shafts for winding purposes, and these were closed The land tunnels are of almilar dimensions

The rules at James street are 90 feet, and at Hamilton Square 100 feet below the level of the booking halls. The stations are 400 feet long by 50 feet wide by 22 feet high, arched with brickwork in cement, 2 feet inches in thickness, and lined to a height of it feet above platform level, with white glazed bricts, the subways being lined in like man-

Mr. Cox says: "The ventilation of the tunnel and stations had been the subject of much consideration. The principle laid down was that fresh air suculd enter at the stations and "split" each way into the tunnel. By this means the atmosphere on the platform was maintained in a condition of purity. The air and then to travel towards a point midway between the stations, whence it was extracted from the tunnel by ventilating fans.

"The air-drift was connected by means of sliding doors with the tunnel and the stations so that the air could be extr. o. d from any point desired. "The fourth fan of 50 feet diameter, exbausting nearly 200,000 cubic feet of air per minute, was erected in Hamilton street, nearly midway betwixt Hamilton Square station and Borough rosa station. The total yield of the four fans amounts to 580,000 cubic feet of air per minute, or about one-seventh part of the total cubic capacity of the tunnel."
